April 14 / 38.

Dear Sir,

The Specimens sent by you in Mr. Davis' letter are among the most common of those brought to the Mint as precious and, and which seem to confirm the adage that "all is not gold that glitters." The larger fragments are of iron pyrite, the small scales are of yellow mica, and both are quite worthless.

With my best regards,
Most truly yours
R. W. P.

Hon. John Sergeant

Dear Sir,

The specimens sent by you in Mr. Ewing's letter are among the most common of those brought to the Mint as precious ores, and which seem to confirm the adage that "all is not gold that glistens." The larger fragments are of iron pyrites, the small scales are of yellow mica, and both are quite worthless.

With my high regards,
R.P.M., Director
